Having worked in hotel and catering management from a young age, Fiona Lee always had an interest in food. After attending many Irish food festivals, she decided to create FixitFood, a website about Irish artisan food.

This idea, born in 2015, developed into so much more after Fiona joined ACORNS. The group of women that Fiona connected with helped her come up with new inspiration for her business. Now Fiona sells a selection of artisan food and goods online and has created a new name to reflect the changes.

After months of experimenting to see what sells best, the newly rebranded Irish Food and Gifts is on track. As a full-time farmer and mother of two, Fiona prides herself on taking food to another level with what she calls food couture and made to order gift sets.

Irish Food and Gifts has received great feedback from food producers and is selling well in Ireland, the US and the UK. There are various options for food and gift sets on the website and there is also the option to customise. Some of the most popular gift sets include teddies with chocolate and other novelty gifts.

Working from The Hive in the Leitrim Technology Enterprise Centre, Carrick on Shannon, Irish Food and Gifts has currently hired one part-time employee and has big plans for the future.

A new website for Irish Food and Gifts is currently in the works and Fiona is also planning to connect with a distributor in the US to make faster and cheaper deliveries across North America.
