Her tulle skirts pushed her into the media spotlight and, just two years after launching her first bridal collection in 2015, Hazel Comyn is now an award-winning bridal designer.

Following a career break, Hazel who had previously worked in a bank, returned to college to study Fashion Design in Mallow College of Design and Tailoring.

Her natural flair for design shone through and she went on to win Designer of the Year with her graduate collection, and then Irish Student Designer of the Year 2014 at Kerry Fashion Week.

When a customer bought one of her designs to wear as a wedding dress in 2015, Hazel started to receive queries about bridal wear.

Her first bridal collection received highly positive reviews, inspiring Hazel to focus on the bridal market. Representing a modern girl, her elegant bridal designs bring with them a sense of tradition and heritage.

As well as wedding dresses, she designs hand-made lace veils, and dresses for bridesmaids and mother of the bride.

Her bespoke designs have featured on RTE's Today Show and TV3's Xposé as well as in several national publications. And in June 2017, Hazel won the Kerry Business Woman of the Year Award in Fashion Design.

ACORNS has boosted Hazel's confidence and given her more direction. While she's currently making all her own designs from her boutique in Cahersiveen, Co. Kerry, she plans to employ someone full time to help her.

Already with several customers from the UK, her plans include breaking further into that market and having an online shop live by September.
