As a practical problem solver who loves finding solutions, Arabella Page created the perfect business – arranging everything from valuations to removal vans for those clearing out a home.

She got the idea for ClearMove after her great-aunt passed away at the age of 93 and her family were tasked with the clearance of her much-loved home of many years.

Arabella offers a full range of services from providing advice and contacts to running the whole move.

With her business, Arabella sorts through a collection of personal belongings and aims to minimise what goes into a skip by finding homes for as much as possible.

First, she builds inventories to figure out what clients want to bring with them and then has certain items valued and prepares a list of potential donation options for everything else.

Since establishing her business one year ago, she has uncovered several pieces of interest, some of which were valued at thousands of euro, so she says it's always worth that extra time to get antique items valued.

Based in Dunlavin, Co Wicklow, Arabella is available to travel and has done work across the country.

Initially, Arabella was unsure of how to turn her idea into a business, but ACORNS has helped her gain clarity on what she was offering and how to turn that into a business model.

Now, she markets herself as a moving planner who finds the best people at the best price for each individual's needs.

She plans to hire some freelancers over the next few months, so that she can continue to grow her business nationwide.

Providing early stage female entrepreneurs, living in rural Ireland, with the knowledge, support and networking opportunities to meet and even exceed their current aspirations.
