making work better

Michelle Wallace is focused on creating high-performance environments for long-term sustainable business growth.

As a culture change agent, she is passionate about making a difference in the world of work. Throughout her career she's seen smart and committed people fade away from an organisation because it wasn't thriving culturally and couldn't capitalise on their strengths. A thoughtful, positive culture not only brings out the best in employees, but creates long-term sustainable business growth.

Leaders and employees at every level are trying to understand how to manage and lead in a changing world. They are balancing multiple generations of workers who each have a different view and expectation of the workforce. The shift to a work from home environment is adding a new layer of complexity. Not to mention the urgent need for improving inclusion and diversity in a moment of time where the world is demanding change.

Michelle lives and breathes her future of work, from her office in Ratoath, Co Meath, Michelle has a highly successful growing team who work entirely flexibly and fully remotely. She is attracting talent that would otherwise be unavailable and unaffordable for small businesses.

As a Gallups Certified Strengths Coach, Michelle works with leaders, employees and organisations to identify where they are brilliant, and what may be holding them back and help develop powerful actionable plans to help the organisation and its people thrive and make work better.

Providing early stage female entrepreneurs, living in rural Ireland, with the knowledge, support and networking opportunities to meet and even exceed their current aspirations.
